This website provides free access to sporting events that NBC has the rights to. You can use the NBC Sports live streaming site on your windows, macOS, or Linux laptop with any modern web browser, as long as you have a high-speed internet connection and cable or satellite subscription. When you visit the official NBC Sports website during the tournament, you can see what appears to be a free live stream of the current match. This is just a free preview, and only lasts for a few minutes. If you want to lift the free trial video restriction, you need to log in via your cable or satellite provider or find someone who is willing to lend you their password. Here's how to broadcast the French Open via NBC Sports: Go to the NBC Sports French Open website. The player will load, and then the French Open live stream will be activated as soon as the still goes live. When the free preview runs out, click CONTINUE. Select your cable or satellite TV provider. Sign in to your cable or satellite account. The online preview limit will be removed and you will be able to stream the entire match. In addition to matches broadcast by NBC, some of the French Open is broadcast by the Tennis Channel. This is a cable channel that is widely available in basic cable and satellite packages, so if you pay for the TV, you may have access to it. If you want to stream the French Open from the tennis channel, here's how to do it: Go to Tennischanneleverywhere.com/watchnow and click Sign in with your TV provider. Select your cable or satellite TV provider. Enter the username and password of your cable or satellite account and click Sign in or Sign in. Your login page can be a little different if you have a different TV provider. Regardless of how you set up the page, you must enter your user name and password and sign in. Return to the Tennis Channel website during the tournament and you will be able to watch live coverage of the French Open. Cable and satellite TV subscribers can broadcast the French Open through NBC Sports and the Tennis Channel, but cable cutters don't have that option. For rope cutters, the best way to broadcast the French Open is to use a video streaming service. Tv streaming services are very similar to and satellite TV, and you can use them to watch live TV just like cable and satellite. The difference is that instead of watching on your TV through a cable or satellite provider, you're broadcasting the content over the internet. You can stream to your COMPUTER or laptop, tablet, phone, or even TV if you have the right device. Given that the French Open broadcasts on both NBC and the Tennis Channel, it is important to choose a service that includes both the local NBC station and the Tennis Channel. These are the most popular streaming services that give you access to the French Open: YouTube TV: This service has the second widest coverage for NBC, and includes the tennis channel at no extra cost. Sling TV: NBC is available in a handful of major markets through this service. You can also get the tennis channel with either Sling Orange or Sling Blue, but only if you pay for the Sports Extra package. The price is still good, so it's worth checking out if your site is included.fuboTV: This service focuses on sports-related channels, but NBC is only available in select markets. You will also have to pay for the Sports Plus package to get the tennis channel, which makes this an expensive option. You can get a free fuboTV trial here. DirecTV now: You don't need DirecTV to use this service, despite the name. It is available to everyone in the United States, but does not offer NBC in every market. It also does not offer Tennis Channel.Hulu with Live TV: NBC is available in most markets through this service, but does not include the tennis channel. If you want to watch every match, this is not a good choice. Each of these services offers some kind of free trial, so this is a good way to broadcast the French Open for free. In addition to streaming to your desktop or laptop, you can also use the same methods to stream the French Open to mobile devices, such as phones and tablets. You can also watch on your TV via streaming devices such as Roku or Apple TV, as well as game consoles. If you have a cable subscription, you can stream the French Open through the NBC Sports app. If you sign up for a streaming service or sign up for a free trial, you'll need to download the app for that service. Here are the apps you'll need to stream the French Open through NBC Sports or the Tennis Channel: Each of the streaming services listed in the previous section also offers a selection of smartphone apps and streaming devices. Thank you for letting us know! Tell us why! The big boys of smartphone cameras Don't be discouraged if you have the latest flagship device, for amateur needs most mid-range smartphones will be able to handle the task with some small sacrifices here and there. So, you got the gun of your choice, what's next? You can have a hard time deciding where to stream, not because of a lack of options, but because there are so many of them. The choice of the streaming application will most likely depend on the common and preferred content. For the most part apps don't limit the type of streaming you can have (obviously the saying and copyrighted content is a no-go), but there are some nuances that we noticed among them. Here are some of the most popular apps you can stream live: If you want to share an activity with your friends and it's more of an occasional event than something you plan to do regularly, then Facebook is the way to go. YouTube [Android | iOS]Everyone has a YouTube account, but if you have a channel dedicated to your hobby and want to stream to your lovers, then go live to YouTube and your subscribers will be able to quickly join you. This feature is only available for channels with more than 100 subscribers. If you're a YouTube partner, you can generate revenue from your feeds with ads. Twitch [Android | iOS]The grandfather of streaming. Twitch is best known for its game streams, but since it added an IRL segment, it has given a big boost to this kind of content across the internet. Although this is the most popular place to stream, unless you plan to get streaming on a professional level, we recommend you stick to some of the most casual apps. Mixer Create [Android | iOS]Mixer is Microsoft's horse in the streaming race. The regular Mixer app is only for tracking flows if you want to be on the other side of things you'll need Mixer Create. The Mixer platform is known for being lightweight and easy to use, but is still far from mainstream. From left to right - Mixer, Twitch, Periscope [Android | iOS]Twitter has its share of the streaming world through this app, so it has good integration between platforms that can be useful if you have multiple followers. Catering more for outdoorsy types, Periscope is more about sharing adventures and experiences. YouNow [Android | iOS]The streams on YouNow are mostly of the occasional informal variety. The app seems to be used more to hang out and connect with people than to explore new places. Most apps have the ability to automatically customize your output to keep you alive as long as possible, but for more information Twitch has an easy-to-use analysis of different resolutions, framerates and required bandwidth for each. While the details will vary widely depending on the application you are using, it gives a good idea of what quality you can expect based on internet speed and device capabilities. Keep in mind that for streaming the significant number is the speed of your connection. Now that you have the device of your choice and the platform to stream, you're pretty much set to go. Depending on your level of commitment, there's some additional equipment you can use to improve the quality of your flow and make it more enjoyable for your audience. You don't have to explain what that is. If you're going to focus the flow on yourself, it will help you get more of your environment in context when visiting an interesting place. Just avoid its full expansion as it can be annoying in crowded crowding GimbleThis is a device that provides active stabilization for your phone or camera. There are options for all budgets and those intended for smartphones can be used with pretty much all models. Some gimbles are a little heavy and can tire your hands faster if you plan on streaming for longer. One of the positive, stabilized videos is more enjoyable to watch, and you'll be able to keep more eyes on your stream. A gimble makes people think that you are serious about what you are doing Outdoor battery is necessary if you plan to leave your home. Even if you don't plan to stream enough to drain your phone, you should always have back-up power in your backpack. External microphoneS microphones on your phone are likely to choose many random noises around you and are very sensitive to interference in the wind. Using the microphone on your headphones will be an improvement, but for best results you need to get a special microphone with a windshield (these furry things you put on microphones). If your phone doesn't have a headphone jack, you should use dongle. Extra lightDesign for streaming at night? You're going to need some extra lighting. A good choice comes in the form of smartphone devices with LED lights, but there will be a significant reduction in battery life if they are connected to your phone. If your flow is from your point of view, you can go for a powerful projector. Back-up internet connectionNo you can stream if you don't have an internet connection, so if you want to avoid downtime, there are solutions that combine multiple sources so you can seamlessly switch between them when in need. The easiest solution is to have a smartphone with two SIM cards from different carriers, so you can switch between the two depending on the coverage. Another option comes from apps like Speedify. Allows you to combine multiple connections. You can set up a second phone as a Wi-Fi access point and connect your primary device to it. Of course, your phone can switch between the two on its own, but this is usually slower and can lead to disconnections. With an app, you can set a minimum bandwidth and you'll make sure you always have it. Now all that remains is to decide what content you want to provide to your viewers. While the streaming scene is as saturated as it is, there's always room for one more, just don't forget to enjoy yourself. Yourself.
